Q: Defining global variables with jquery I have a global variable I want to use and I am declaring it in a function. Then if I need to reuse the variable outside of the function I can't access it. The only way to access it is if I re-declare it outside of the function. Is there a way to define a global variable and keep it private to the function? A: You have two choices: Pass it as an argument to the function: `function foo() { var myPrivateVar = 'world'; } foo('myPrivateVar');` A: As others have pointed out, the best way is to define a local variable inside a function and then define a global variable (if you need to share it between multiple functions): `(function($){ var myLocalVar = 'hello'; $.myClass'.`
