Just thought I would start a blog to give you guys a little look into what I do and who I am. A little bit about myself and my opinions. I am a songwriter so, my music is my first love. I usually make them slowly and love making them. Find things that I love and just put it in my sketchbook. In the past, I have been in a couple of my own bands that are no more, but I have made a couple of music videos which can be found in my channel. Although, I am an avid gamer, I am also the funniest person to be around when it comes to gaming. I love beating high score on games and consoles. And if the console is a controller, I also love getting controller benefits from the games. I hope you enjoy my content, I don't come to the point where I talk about it. I will be uploading videos every Saturday, so come back. Each episode covers the latest release of the software and hardware, including developments, changes in development plans and the status of the software and hardware in the Linux ecosystem. The videos start off with an exploration of the Linux kernel, the first few million instructions that live in every computer. The next sections will demonstrate all of the various ways that the Linux kernel interacts with the rest of the computer. The host will share the ways in which it is prepared to fight for your right to free software. There will also be news segments covering the latest updates to operating systems and laptops. Finally, no episode would be complete without a do-it-yourself segment. Maniac Mondays strives to satisfy the need of those who are looking for a non-biased podcast that explores the latest updates of technology in an accessible manner. Linux enthusiasts, Windows users, and everyone in-between will feel comfortable with Maniac Mondays. This video is for you if you are interested in buying/building a computer. It provides a brief overview of common hardware and software components you should be aware of before buying a PC. Price is not discussed in this video. My email: info@mrafff.net Facebook: Twitter:
